Ambassador Braj Kumar Nehru, India's Commissioner General for Economic Affairs, was educated at his home university in Allahabad, at the London School of Economics, Balliol College, Oxford, and at the Inner Temple. Described variously as chief negotiator for economic aid to India and his country's roving economic ambassador, Mr. Nehru started his official career upon joining the Indian Civil Service in 1934 as the Assistant Commissioner in the undivided Punjab. In 1939 he was posted at the Union Government's Headquarters as Under Secretary to the Department of Education, Health and Lands. Thereafter he joined the Department of Finance, and after serving the Ministry in different capacities was appointed Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Economic Affairs, in 1957. Earlier, from 1949 to 1954, he was stationed in Washington as Executive Director, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. He also served as Minister, Embassy of India.
